Mourning with Antigone: Civil War and Public Mourning in Patricia Ariza’s Antígona
Katie Billotte (Royal Holloway College: University of London)

Fetishism and Symbolic Violence: Anish Kapoor’s Svayambh
Filippo Menozzi (University of Kent)

Therapeutic Narrations: Recounting Fascist Psychological Violence in Alberto Asor Rosa’s L’Alba di un Mondo Nuovo and Esther Tusquets’ Habíamos ganado la guerra
Christian Gabriele Moretti (University of Kent)

Confronting Violence in Reading and Representation: Brutality and Witnessing in the Work of Edwidge Danticat
Jo Collins (University of Kent)

Georges Bataille’s ‘Ethics of Violence’
Angelos Evangelou (University of Kent)

Violence, Resistance and the Birth of a New Literature
Vedita Cowaloosur (University of Warwick)
The Skepsi team

Fabien Arribert-Narce
Krista Bonello Rutter Giappone
Harriet Clements
Wissia Fiorucci
Melanie Foehn
Maureen Kincaid Speller
Kamilla Pawlikowska
Alvise Sforza Tarabochia

Skepsi is an online research journal based in the School of European Culture and Languages at the University of Kent (SECL) and is entirely run by research students.

The aim of Skepsi’s editorial board is twofold: to honour the spirit of SECL by striving to take advantage of its unique position as a crossroads in academic studies in Europe and to become a forum for European postgraduate researchers and postdoctoral scholars by developing collective thinking processes in the context of academic research.

Our title, Skepsi — which comes from the Ancient Greek ‘σκέψις [skepsis]’ or ‘enquiry’ and the Modern Greek ‘σκέψις [skésepsis]’ or ‘thought’ — symbolises our will to explore new areas and new methods in the traditional fields of academic research in the Humanities and Social Sciences. Originality and creativity in the approach of thought and of texts are crucial for us: to enhance and to promote these aspects will be our contribution to the tremendous range of existing academic publications.
Acknowledgements

The idea for this special issue of Skepsi originated from the Postgraduate Conference ‘Pharmakon: Literature and Violence’, held at the University of Kent on 20th May 2010; indeed, three of the articles in this issue were originally presented, wholly or in part, as papers on that occasion. I must thank my conference co-organisers Qing Xie and Bahriye Kemal for their help in organising that event and for their friendship. The conference was hosted and financed by the School of English at the University of Kent and made possible thanks to the invaluable support of Dr. Sarah Wood. I am also deeply indebted to Professor Abdulrazak Gurnah, Professor Bernhard Klein, Dr. David Herd and Dr. Kaori Nagai for their advice and participation. Special thanks are due to Dr. Peter Morey, from the University of East London, who kindly agreed to be our Keynote Speaker and who made an outstanding contribution to the conference. I must also thank Ole Birk Laursen, who extended the call for contributions for this issue of Skepsi to another exciting event, the Open University Postgraduate Conference ‘Reading Conflict’, held at the Institute of English Studies, University of London, on 19th July 2010.

No issue would be possible without articles from authors, so no small thanks are due not only to those whose articles have been selected for publication but also to the others who submitted articles for consideration but were, on this occasion, disappointed. The contribution of the teams of volunteer peer reviewers, copy editors and proofreaders to the quality of the journal’s content must also not be overlooked. Especial thanks in connection with this issue must go to Alvise Sforza Tarabochia and Albert Garcia Ferrero for their advice and assistance with regard to translations from Italian and Spanish.

On a personal note, I offer a big thank you to Professor Caroline Rooney for her support, guidance and encouragement and to Fabien Arribert-Narce, Alvise Sforza Tarabochia and the Skepsi Editorial Team for providing me with the opportunity to participate in the journal’s enthusiastic environment of research.

Finally, all the Skepsi editors and I wholeheartedly thank the School of European Culture and Languages for sponsoring the printing of this issue and financing the future endeavours of this journal.

Filippo Menozzi
Contents

Foreword ..................................................................................................................................................... iv

Katie Billotte
Mourning with Antigone: Civil War and Public Mourning in Patricia Ariza’s Antígona 1

Filippo Menozzi
Fetishism and Symbolic Violence: Anish Kapoor’s Svayambh ................................. 11

Christian Gabriele Moretti
Therapeutic Narrations: Recounting Fascist Psychological Violence in Alberto Asor Rosa’s L’Alba di un Mondo Nuovo and Esther Tusquets’ Habíamos ganado la guerra... 23

Jo Collins
Confronting Violence in Reading and Representation: Brutality and Witnessing in the Work of Edwidge Danticat ............................................................................................................. 41

Angelos Evangelou
Georges Bataille’s ‘Ethics of Violence’ .................................................................................................. 51

Vedita Cowaloosur
Violence, Resistance and the Birth of a New Literature .............................................................. 65
Foreword

As Edward Said observed in many of his important writings, texts and representations do not exist as if in a void but play an active role in the world and are contaminated by a multitude of heterogeneous realities. Part and parcel of this fundamental quality of ‘worldliness’, violence is one compelling reality which has reached a remarkable threshold of visibility in the contemporary world and which has been subjected to a problematic work of distancing and spectacularisation.

The effects of violence are many: it both limits narrative possibilities, restrains by the imposition of silence and demands the most dramatic and urgent representative articulations. This issue of Skepsi draws its metaphorical inspiration from the image of the pharmakon, an ambiguous Ancient Greek word suggesting as it does in its double meaning of medicine and poison connotations of both pharmaceutical remedy and perilous supplement to the human organism. The ambivalence of the pharmakon could elucidate an important aspect of literature and art, in their participation in and testimony to contexts of violence, war and brutality. With their different emphases, the articles included in this issue address the many and varied ways in which violence imposes a worldly dimension of artistic and literary forms. Although the conference organisers intended literature to be the main cultural practice under scrutiny, these critical essays have intriguingly extended their creative scope far beyond the analysis of literary works by reaching into expressive domains such as theatre and the plastic arts and through their dynamic interaction with divergent types of violence, from the political brutality of totalitarian and colonial regimes to the ideological configurations of structural and symbolic violence, or dramatic situations of war and conflict.

The essays collected in this issue make use of different theoretical and methodological frameworks and aim at presenting original interventions in different areas of research in the humanities: from postcolonial studies to comparative literature, psychoanalysis, aesthetics, sociology and philosophy. I hope the reader will encounter in the following pages material that stimulates thought and critical reflection.

Filippo Menozzi, Guest Editor, Autumn 2010